Sylvan Esso
“Endlessly ecstatic and three-dimensional” — NPR

NORTH ADAMS, MASSACHUSETTS — Singer Amelia Meath of the legendary Bennington band Mountain Man, and producer Nick Sanborn of psychedelic folksters Megafaun, create effortless, wonderful electronic pop music that twists, turns, and constantly reinvents itself. Their 2014 self-titled debut thrust them into the national spotlight with ten songs that suggested sheer alchemy — both unlikely and undeniable. Recognized as “endlessly ecstatic” by NPR, and for its “urbane playfulness” by Pitchfork, come hear your new favorite band, Sylvan Esso, in its first MASS MoCA appearance on Saturday, March 31.

Amelia Meath started her musical career just up the road at Bennington College, forming the critically acclaimed Appalachian folk-trio Mountain Man with fellow Bennington alumnae Molly Erin Sarle and Alexandra Sauser-Monnig in 2009 and performing at MASS MoCA’s Solid Sound Festival just a year later. While on a tour stop in Milwaukee, Nick Sanborn’s instrumental hip-hop solo project Made of Oak opened for the trio. Described by Sanborn as “one of the most ill-fitting yet serendipitous concert bookings ever,” that night he was asked to remix the Meath-penned Mountain Man song “Play it Right” (NPR). Soon after hearing his particularly affecting version, emails and music files began to fly between the two, and Sylvan Esso started to take shape, officially forming in 2013 after Meath’s move to Durham, NC, where the duo is now based.

Combining Sanborn’s throbbing sugary dance beats and Meath’s indie-latticed warbling vocals, Sylvan Esso sprang into view fully formed in 2014 with the release of its eponymous debut album chock-full of near-perfect singles. The album cracked the top 40 on the Billboard 200 and reached No. 7 on the Independent Albums chart. The single, “Hey Mami,” was subsequently named the song of the year by Paste Magazine in 2014. The duo’s synth-laden hooks — which help make them electro-pop darlings — often come with an acidic edge and unaffected, raw lyrics rooted in Meath’s folk background. This balance came into full focus on the group’s sophomore album, What Next, released last April, which “offers a biting, withering take on pop music, full of crisp humor while still finding real moments of tenderness” (Pitchfork).

Sylvan Esso’s live shows are just as unexpected and intoxicating as its Technicolor electro-dance grooves. From Sanborn’s on-the-fly sampling to Meath’s signature five-inch-high platform sneakers and self-described “dorky dance moves,” the duo puts on a hook-laden, make-you-move show. Since rocketing to the top, the group has brought its strobe-filled concert experience all over the world, making appearances at all the top festivals, from Coachella to South by Southwest and to the Eaux Claires festival in the fittingly sylvan Wisconsin where it all began.

This spring, Sylvan Esso heads up to our forest-filled mountains for a synth-splattered, high-energy, dance-heavy concert. Show off your own dorky dance moves during the duo’s MASS MoCA debut on Saturday, March 31. Lickety Split, MASS MoCA’s in-house café, serves up fresh salads, homemade soup, and lip-smacking pub fare. The MASS MoCA bar is always well-stocked with local beer from Bright Ideas Brewing and Berkshire Mountain Distillery spirits.
