

CJ Field

Rock-and-roots, NAMA-style

NORTH ADAMS, MASSACHUSETTS — North Adams native CJ Field wasn't born with a guitar in his hand — but he could have been. He carved out a place for himself on the Nashville scene as a frontman of the edgy rock-and-roots collaborative The Delta Riot and as a chart-topping songwriter. He's back in his hometown on Saturday, March 3, at 8pm for a show of spirited, gritty guitar that's sure to please all you fans of Sam Cooke, Levon Helm, or Ryan Adams.

CJ Field used to be known in these parts as an all-state wrestler for Hoosac Valley High School, in Adams/Cheshire, which is next door to North Adams, but over the past decade he's transformed into a beloved hometown musician. After cutting his teeth on the Berkshire gig circuit, he spread his musical wings down South, wandering through Macon, Georgia, and Nashville, Tennessee, where he rose to prominence in the local club scene with his top notch country twang. It's here that Field connected with drummer Jme Christian, the two eventually forming the Nashville-based, rock-n-roll outfit The Delta Riot.

Field left some of the rougher riffs and foot-stomping behind when he folded The Delta Riot to settle into a ripper, bluesy, soul-filled sound, echoing his musical influences: Elvis Presley, Hank Williams, and blues giants Muddy Waters, Otis Redding, and Robert Johnson. You'll hear echoes of all of them on Field's most recent release and debut solo album, Apologies.

With deep roots in the Berkshires, Field divides his time between these Massachusetts hills and the juke points of Nashville, playing everywhere from The Red Lion Inn to the North Adams American Legion when he's Berkshire-based. From his first live performance, just down the street from MASS MoCA at the bar Key West, to his imminent MASS MoCA debut, CJ Field loves to set a crowd abuzz; get ready for a good time. This hometown wayfarer returns to North Adams on Saturday, March 3, at 8pm.
